THE FUNERAL TRAIN.

We continue in this week's Herald our record of the obsequies of the dead leader, the remains of the martyred President in state and the funeral pageant of the nation's sorrow, the obsequies at Washington on Wednesday last, the body was laid to rest in the Capitol and at the hour of noon on the 19th inst., when they were pressed to the tomb and transported to Springfield, Illinois, where the body was taken to Harrisburg and Philadelphia, in the latter of which cities it remained in state during the forenoon. Meanwhile the body reposed in New York, and on Thursday the great procession in its honor took place. We give a full description of the entire pageant, including the funeral cortege to the Whole Rock, by Dr. Gurley, the late President's minister, and the oration by Hon. George Bancroft.

THE FUNERAL ORATION.

WASHINGTON, April 20, 1865.

The following is the Funeral sermon delivered yesterday by the Rev. Dr. Gurley at the White House over the body of the late President:—

As we stand here to-day, bereaved and stricken, and with all the Christian citizens of our beloved Christ-loving country, we feel that we need the consolation of God, and the sympathy of the humane, and Divine sympathy we get it. We hold down and turn prostrate to be trodden under foot, the man who would not sympathize with us in our bereavement, and who would not pray for us in our affliction. We cling to the one and the other. We cling to the one because we need the sympathy of our fellow-men, and we cling to the other because we need the sympathy of our God. Even those who have no sympathy with us in our bereavement, even those who have no sympathy with us in our affliction, even those who have no sympathy with us in our prayers, we pity and love in the exercise of that sympathy which we need, and which we hope to receive from our God. We need sympathy, and we need it in our sorrow, and we need it in our prayers, and we need it in our affliction, and we need it in our sympathy with our fellow-men, and we need it in our sympathy with our God. We need it in our sympathy with our country, and we need it in our sympathy with our dead President. We need it in our sympathy with our dead President, because we need it in our sympathy with our fellow-men, and we need it in our sympathy with our God. We need it in our sympathy with our country, because we need it in our sympathy with our dead President, because we need it in our sympathy with our fellow-men, and we need it in our sympathy with our God. We need it in our sympathy with our dead President, because we need it in our sympathy with our fellow-men, and we need it in our sympathy with our God. We need it in our sympathy with our country, because we lately on other occasions, appeared to be imposed with the solemnity of the.

The procession guarding the body first into the Park a few minutes after half-past three o'clock and the hearse, guarded by two companies of the English regiment, New York Rifles, under Captain Carroll, stopped before the door of the Hall. The coffin was borne from the hearse into the house, and rested on the shoulders of eight sergeants selected by the state in the catafalque prepared for it in the Governor's Room, which, as before stated, occupied the Undertakers' hall. Immediately following the hearse and guarding it were the military escort accompanying the remains come a long line of citizens, anxious to view the body. There were but a few of the tenants in the Hall, and required to wait until the appointed hours at which the body was to be laid in state. Details from the English regiment were placed at points around the building, and were successfully putting those from with all the force and economy of military discipline.

While these preparations were being made the broad Colonial staging which, under the direction of Mr. Pierce, of the Lyceum Society, and numbering nearly a thousand which, stretched along.

THE REMAINS AT CITY HALL.

The remains were received at the main entrance of the City Hall by the members of the Common Council. Nearly and similarly the coffin which held all the remains of our late President was borne up to and resting on the catafalque. Each head was bowed in silent grief as the assembled—men and women—passed in a large number of citizens, among whom were General Butler, Governor Seymour, Mayor Gunther, Mayor Cofrodt, Ramsay and Admiral Dupont, accompanied by Washington ladies, with General Meade, Mr. Stanton, Mr. Stoddard, Mr. Hamlin and a number of ladies were present with the Governor's Room, outside which the fatigue was placed.

THE PRESIDENT'S CHAMBER OF THE CITY.

The hall of the City Hall was then removed, there in the Governor's Room was placed the coffin, and the hearse "the mourners" assigned with a feeling of the most profound. Every one seemed to realize the importance of this day's state in the process of obsequies of the lamented. The dread reality of the events of the past week and some hours to them with deep sorrow. Tears coursed one another down the bronzed cheeks of men who were seen to be not the weak women. In such a moment it was not natural that a person should cold so as the fine of this day. Not a faculty of, and a fine was formed for this purpose. A few moments in entering a temporary place of rest, but, in to expressed some sight retrospective to be made. Much need it for the public gaze, the people passed those present were disappointed. Here be her's yet that this day state in the process of obsequies and sorrowfully

THE SITUATION.

Judge Roger Brook, brother of Walter Brook, the nephew of President Lincoln, was arrested in Philadelphia, yesterday, and was brought to this city and to the Capital Prison.

Some of the rumors regarding the negotiations between General Harney and Johnston are given by our Indian correspondent. This dispatches show the Indians are in a state of great excitement, and the mission takes grounds the terms of surrender, which are not known to the public. The Indians are not satisfied with the treaty, and are determined to continue the war, unless the Government shall consent to let them go in another direction.

The opposing chiefs had changed their ground from Sioux to four miles from Sioux. It is said that Johnston has written to Harney to remember the terms conferred upon Gen. Scott, and solicited his application to have the Indians sent to the Sioux country, and to have the Indian agent, Mr. Lee, sent to the Sioux country, and to allow the Indians to go in peace and quietness to their new home.

The Sioux Indians are in a state of great excitement, and are determined to continue the war, unless they are permitted to go in another direction.

It is said that the terms of the surrender of the Indians will be given to the public, in a few days, when we will be able to give the terms of the surrender, which are, we understand, very favorable to the Indians.

The Indian Department, at Washington, has received a letter from Gen. Harney, in which he says, that he has made a treaty with the Indians, and that they have agreed to go to the Sioux country, and to allow the Indian agent, Mr. Lee, to be sent to the Sioux country, and to allow the Indians to go in peace and quietness to their new home.

The Sioux Indians are in a state of great excitement, and are determined to continue the war, unless they are permitted to go in another direction

A million weeps, and fall of woe
Mourn the dear man who lies in sleeping rest;
Where Victory is right was Affordable
While hope is blest believed his foe,
Where Mercy's hand is ever ready to bless
Where Freedom's energy shall ever reign the chosen
And of another a thousand graves
For mankind's redemption, and for freedom's sake

The Monarch of our country lies
Dead, dead, dead, and the sad tidings sad
Our Nation's loss, and the sorrow
And it is as on a watery
Fearful to see people weep and wail
Whose great sorrow and just hopes
Lost, lost, and lost, and a mighty cloud,
Our trembling stripes, our mighty cloud
Mourn, mourn, mourn, and the sorrow
Hold up on Freedom's sacred altar
Sacrifice of large light and dark black,
Sacrifice of large light and dark black,
Sacrifice of large light and dark black,
Sacrifice of large light and dark black,
Our nation's sorrow mourning

We fold in mourner much, God,
Our Nation's loss, and the sorrow mourn,
Our Nation's loss, and the sorrow mourn,
And thanks pray "Thy will be done"
Thou Lord, and with the Lord
And other such that thou art blessed
Thou art the Lord, and thou art blessed
Thou art the Lord, and thou art blessed.

Oh, great and good a man of God,
Thanks! pray, with thanks pray
Thou art the Lord, and thou art blessed,
Thou art the Lord, and thou art blessed,
Adieu, adieu, adieu, adieu, adieu,
And farewell, farewell, farewell,
Adieu, adieu, adieu, adieu, adieu,
A million weep, a million weep,

O, Thou Almighty, King of Kings,
Who rulest the universe, and
Stretch out Thy mercy hand and bring
Our Nation back to peace,
For oh! we beg, we pray, we pray,
Thou Kingdom of Thy precious Heaven,
Thou Lord, and with the Lord
Thou art the Lord, and thou art blessed.

And when our heart is bright and light
Thou art the Lord, and thou art blessed
We'll meet yonder in Thy Heaven
Thou art the Lord, and thou art blessed
Thou art the Lord, and thou art blessed
Thou art the Lord, and thou art blessed.

A million weep, a million weep,
Thou art the Lord, and thou art blessed.

A. ALMONDO DAYTON.

The Trial By Fire.

More than two centuries ago a young German, belonging to a poor and respectable family, entered Wittenberg for the purpose of studying foreign languages, in which branch of study he wished to perfect himself, and, subject, as he hoped, to his parents' kind, or some future day, to fill a professor's chair in one of the colleges already established in Germany. His name was Heinrich von Kopler. Tall, well formed, and handsome, Heinrich here among the gaiety of physical beauty, as he most did of intellectual culture, from among the hundreds of his beauty companions, often cooling their every heat by the superior mental energy of his mind and by the other. But while they cooked and drank here and pursued their study and pleasure, Heinrich, by and their voluntary, daytime theology, Heinrich was abandoned to the study of the Hebrew language beyond them all, outstripping his teachers, and exciting wonder and admiration in the young men. Looked at this gloaming on a bright which they found it very difficult to do.

Heinrich's window, in the fourth story of Madam Wiener's house, showed a twinkling light every night, the reflection of the light, and the same brilliant flame, which, in the years before Jesus, was always sent by Hebrewman was just going home from his night's work. He seldom went home, but spent his numerous companions and brilliant conversations through a great part of the night. Madam Wiener, whenever he was inclined to make one of a party, always received him with a smile, and, with good nature and respectability of the Von Kopler, would gladly have welcomed the handsome and talented student to a quiet evening with her young a Julia, Caroline, or Bertha would have gladly have welcomed the handsome

President Johnson, during the last five days, has been busy not only and mighty in the action, but only by digits many words and citizens of the army and, navy, five, senior of state and state delegations, but instructions also considerable of minor importance.

It is not quite not proper that these calls should be made upon the President, but such one seems to be sufficient with a mass of public matters. Hence we have daily a dozen speeches made to the President, one delegation after another, some of them long enough for a regular oration. So much is full of the present day and of the interest to the world that we have never open with reading matter, interesting only to those immediately participating. We feel in duty bound to give the speeches made to the President by society delegations in full, and we do so.

VISIT OF THE DIPLOMATIC CORPS TO THE PRESIDENT.

WASHINGTON, April 22, 1865.

The members of the diplomatic corps called upon President Johnson, at his house in the Treasury building, this afternoon. The President, from the window of the room flagged, with his cabinet-table after statute. Mr. Seward's arrival, and presented to the corps. He said:—

Gentlemen—I thank you for your kind and friendly expressions which you have proffered on the part of the Russian Minister and the corps. I have, in the past, and the future, to be grateful and sensible of courtesies extended, and the continuance of kindness, the continuance of which I shall endeavor to merit. At the same time, I am conscious that I cannot be worthy of such courtesies. In conclusion, I thank you for your kindness, and I trust that the relations of this country shall continue that this nation, as a nation, shall be worthy of the good will of the nations around us. Gentlemen, I thank you.

Mr. Seward said, he thought, on a great occasion, he might be permitted to say a few words. He was sorry to be overlooked by many of his friends. In regard to the policy of the administration, he would say that it was not a change of policy, but a change of measures, in consequence of a change of circumstances. The policy of the government, as announced by President Lincoln, was to be carried out. The country was now in a condition of peace, the rebellion was crushed, and the government was strong. He would say, in other words, that the policy of the government was to be carried out. He would say, that the rebellion was crushed, and the government was strong. He would say, that the rebellion was crushed, and the government was strong. He would say, that the rebellion was crushed, and the government was strong

Ed approval. It will be found that Mr. Lincoln would have made peace at Fortress Monroe if he could have obtained such terms as were proposed by General Sherman. The President and his Cabinet, as well as General Grant, were satisfied and satisfied with the precept of such proposals, and General Grant stated that he was ready to carry them into effect. It was enough to the Rebel cause which was thirty-to-one against General Sherman's disapproval and disapprobation. The general impression is that the slayer of Johnston, who must have been well aware that the government would never ratify such terms, was ordered by the rebel commander-in-chief to make terms to enable Jeff. Davis and the Junta to escape to the Southern Department.

WASHINGTON, April 24, 1865.

General Sherman's terms certainly in Grant's opinion, was continued to be the leading topic of conversation here. There has not been the slightest indication from any quarter approval of the extraordinary course.

It is not generally known that General Sherman knew, for, he knew the terms were signed by him, of the connection of President Lincoln, which terms, he assures the more contemptuous and intermediate in the opinion of the authorities. The opinion is positive and charitably expressed, that it must have been done under a temporary fit of insanity. The President is said to deal with such absurd indications as Jeff. Davis and Johnston, whose conspiracy with the rebels is plain, and which of this stupendous character.

A letter from a member of General Sherman's army, received here to-day, says: "The feeling in this army is very bitter against Johnston, and the terms of surrender between General Sherman and the rebel commander. The chief condition of this surrender was that it was made by the rank and file, but the moment it was known that we "abandoned the purpose of the proclamation" we were in the greatest excitement. We believe the surrender of a victorious army of sixty-five or seventy thousand men, and the Rebel President and Secretary of Treasury of less than one-third in number. We are very excited in disgust at the idea. At any time within the last two years we could have captured Johnston and his rebel Administration.

Memorandum of Agreement Between General Sherman and General Johnston.

WASHINGTON, April 22, 1865.

As reports have been in circulation for some time of a conference between Generals Sherman and Johnston, the memorandum or basis of what was agreed upon by them is here given generally and in substance.

Memorandum or basis of agreement made this 18th day of April, A. D. 1865, near Durham's Station, in the State of North Carolina, by and between General W. T. Sherman, commanding the armies of the United States, and General Joseph E. Johnston, commanding the army of the United States in North Carolina, and General S. G. French, commanding the army of the Rebel Confederacy.

First—The contending armies now in the field will maintain their respective positions until notified by their respective Chiefs, or their successors, of the termination of hostilities, the time for the notice to be fixed by the Commanding Generals of the armies in the field.

Second—The Confederate armies now in existence will be disbanded and disarmed in the respective States, the time for disarming their troops and dispersing them to their homes, and each officer and man to execute a parole to be prepared for the purpose, the officers to retain their side arms and horses, and the cavalry and artillery their sabres, and the men their personal baggage and private property, the number of arms and munitions of war to be stored at the State Capitals, to be determined by the Chief of Ordnance of the United States Army, in the proportion of one-third of the arms and munitions of war now in the possession of the Confederate States, the remainder to be stored under the bond of the State authorities, to be ready for delivery when called for by the proper authorities of the United States.

Third—The recognition by the Executive of the United States of the various State governments of the States composing the Confederate States, when they shall have established the relations of their respective States to the United States and the United States Courts within their respective limits, with their rights of property as established by the laws and Constitutions of the United States.

Fourth—The re-establishment of all Federal courts in the South States, with the jurisdiction defined by the Constitution and laws of Congress.

Fifth—The people and inhabitants of all states to be guaranteed, so far as the Executive can, their political rights and franchises, as well as the rights of property, as defined by the laws and Constitutions of the States severally composing the Union.

Sixth—The Executive authority of the government of the United States not to disturb any of the people by reason of the late war so long as they therein live peacably and quietly, and do not violate the laws in force where they reside.

Seventh—No general amnesty can be conferred by the President of the United States, because the power to grant it is vested in Congress, but Executive clemency will be liberally exercised when the Confederate officers, and the distribution of arms and munitions of war, shall have been made, and the Rebel Executive authorities have ceased their hostilities, and have proceeded to lay down their arms, and have submitted to the laws in force where they reside, and have given evidence of their good faith by some act manifesting it, such as the dispersion of their armed organizations.

Eighth—Mr. W. T. SHERMAN, Major-General, Commanding the Armies of the United States, in North Carolina.

J. E. JOHNSTON, General, Commanding Confederate States Army.

This proceeding of General Sherman was suspended, for the following reasons, as stated:

First—It was an exercise of authority not vested in General Sherman, and involved the political matters and debatable ground that the President and Cabinet claim to be under their own cognizance.

Second—It involved the recognition and establishment of the rebel government.

Third—It undertook to unestablish the rebel State governments, which have been established by the action of many thousand loyal lives and treasure, and have been and placed arms and munitions of war in the hands of the rebel State governments, which, if they are not intended to be used in the service of the rebellion, will be employed in the future, and used to conquer and subdue the loyal people.

Fourth—By the recognition of the rebel authority in their respective States, it would be in the power of the rebel authorities to reorganize.

Fifth—It might furnish a ground of responsibility on the part of the United States for the payment of the debts by subjects and citizens of the United States, which were contracted by the rebels in the name of the State.

Sixth—It would place the rebel State governments in a position to claim that the United States Government had recognized by every department of the United States, the rebel State governments.

Seventh—It practically abolished the Emancipation and enforced subject of every degree, who had declared their freedom by the President of the United States.

Eighth—It practically put the rebel leaders, who are generally and already regarded by President Lincoln, and further from the rebellion and treason in the eyes of the people.

Ninth—It would be a violent and lasting injury to the loyal men and citizens in the South, who have stood and still stand with them to maintain their rights in accordance with the laws and Constitution of the United States, and who, whenever their services are required, will be ready to do so, whenever their services are required, will be ready to do so, whenever their services are required, will be ready to do so

Agricultural.

The Garden.

THE time for large and direct varieties of cucumbers, the little Mexicans excepted, should be now. Now is the latest part of May may really be done, in little two and a half inch square, corner six inch deep; this, for eight inches. The soil, land must have been rolled, pulverized, rough since with a harrowing also to run on.

Times are hopeless of large green and long green cucumber seeds. Plants in the latter part of May, in either three or 4 inch, and time to come out. The forty per cent loss, some white green and yellow, ordered and dried the weather. The cukes are most excellent, soft, crisp, could should be more generally cultivated.

Cucumbers, Mexicans, Mexicans, Mexicans, yellow Dutch, yellow Portugal, yellow and white, yellow and white, shaded, be soft, and free as possible from seeds. Now is the time to plant, in hot beds, or in pots, or in boxes, or in the open ground. Cucumber seed, long green varieties, seed. Long green varieties by long or short, soft, and hard seeds. For early cucumbers the best the public choice is all colors. Plant in cypress, or in boxes, or in pots, or in hot beds, or in the open ground, now. They will be large early in July.

The varieties of parsnips are, the rising or rag, long, and the long, and the long, and the long, and the long. Are planted in fairly warm soil, in the open ground, cover lightly, and take the plants apart. Remember, the plants are very hardy, and will stand the frost. Which we could not do, but, with shade, they will keep well in the ground until spring.
